Dear Jeremy Tarr,

Please help take action to schedule public hearings before any approval/action to allow the Atlantic Coast Pipeline (ACP) in NC.

As a student at Wake Forest University School of Divinity, I studied this issue and examined the particular impact of the ACP on the Native American population of Robeson County. Not only is this an impoverished and marginalized community (by being minority, less educated and wealthy, and less well represented even as a tribal community that lacks federal status), they have sacred spaces that will be destroyed by ACP pipeline construction. All over Robeson County are unmarked graves. I helped to document this in the environmental impact statement by working with an attorney at the Southern Environmental Law Center in Chapel Hill.

As a clergy person and a advocate for those whose sacred spaces are being threatened—not to mention the threat to water quality and an potential economic threat that far exceeds any gain— please act now to let North Carolinians voices be heard.

We do not want the Atlantic Coast Pipeline!

Peace and gratitude,
